

List of British Consular Officials in the Ottoman Empire and its former territories, from the sixteenth century to about 1860

July 2011

Introduction

The following list has grown from a set of rough notes compiled by David Wilson while he was helping to catalogue the papers of Sir John Elijah Blunt at the University of Birmingham. The original aim was simply to identify people mentioned in those papers, but it soon became obvious that they were connected by a complicated network of family relationships extending over several generations. A more detailed account of those most closely connected with the Blunt family is being prepared separately, but it is hoped this draft list may be useful for people researching other families or particular consulates, since there does not appear to be a single reliable source of information with such a wide coverage. In preparing this list, it was found that many of the sources are unreliable, incomplete or contradictory; this led to the adoption of a format which tries to show clearly where each piece of information came from. This does produce a rather cluttered effect, with a lot of brackets, but it makes it simple to remove redundant material or insert new as the project develops. Quite a lot of material from earlier drafts has already been removed as the picture became clearer.

The aim has been to include all appointments from the foundation of the Levant Company in 1581 up to 1 Jan 1860, although some later appointments are also listed. The end point was chosen as being a time after the Crimean War when the Levant Consular Service had more or less settled down after the various upheavals that followed the transfer from the Levant Company to the Foreign Office.

Many of the references given here are to documents in The National Archives or other collections which have not been seen personally by the compiler and are only known from information in catalogues or references in other publications. From the few which he has seen personally, it is obvious that there is much more detail to be found, for example in the original papers of Levant Company, and close examination of these should remove many of the uncertainties in the present list.

For the period before 1825, printed lists of consuls occasionally appeared in various almanacs and similar publications. As these obviously copied each other, the original source of each list is difficult to identify and by the time it appeared in any particular publication it might well be considerably out of date. Another point to be remembered is that with the difficulties of travel and communication at that time, there might be considerable delays between a consul being appointed and taking up his post – and between one dying and the appointment of a successor. Also, some ‘appointments’ appear to have been re-appointments, such as those made after the accession of George III or after the handover from the Levant Company to the Foreign Office.

While bearing this in mind, attempts were made to ascertain the date when each consul was appointed and when he finally left a post – by transfer, retirement, or death. However in many cases it was only possible to find references to him being in post in a particular year, and this is where more work is needed.

In 1825, at the time of the winding-up of the Levant Company, a list of the Company’s officers was printed (FO 881/2353). Although this includes some early vice-consuls and consular agents, there were probably several more of these who had been acting more or less officially for the Company. Over the next thirty years, several more extensive lists were presented as Parliamentary Papers, and in 1852 the regular publication of the Foreign Office List began. The first few editions are somewhat unreliable but by the 1860s this gave fairly comprehensive information about who the consuls were and where they were posted. However these official lists rarely provided any genealogical information. Attempts have been made to remedy this lack by using a wide variety of sources, of varying reliability. Where no reference is shown it is usually because a primary source (such as a church register) was not given, but in some cases the information was collected at an early stage of the project, and the source was not recorded – in either case the information needs to be verified.

Ambassadors are only mentioned briefly here because they have been well documented elsewhere. Because they too have been fairly well documented elsewhere, dragomans have usually only been mentioned here when they also carried out other functions. However some other non-consular staff such as treasurers, chaplains and surgeons have been included because they were often people who are interesting in their own right.

Much more detailed study of primary sources will be required before the list becomes really reliable, but it is hoped that even in its present form it may be of some use to other researchers – and that it will at least highlight the danger of relying on any single source of information, however authoritative this might appear to be. The list is being made public at this stage in the hope that other researchers will help to fill some of the gaps that remain, to correct any mistakes and suggest improvements, and particularly to add more personal details of the consuls and their families.

Constantinople

~[Until the appointment of Isaac Morier as CG in 1804, the chief representative of the Levant Company at Constantinople was the ambassador, who acted as the Company's senior consul as well as being an agent of the Crown [Wood*EHR* ]. He would usually have a private secretary for his own work and the king's, while for the Company's business there was another secretary, who also acted as cancellier and deputed for the ambassador in the event of his absence, and a treasurer. [Anderson*ECT*, p. 25] Financial affairs in the Company's factories were managed by treasurers at Constantinople, Smyrna and, until 1783, Aleppo. These treasurers were usually well-established factors who were elected by their local colleagues, but sometimes the Company sent out its own appointees from London.]

Ambassadors

~[A comprehensive list of ambassadors from 1583 to 1824, with dates of appointment and other details, is given in Wood [pp. 250-252]. Lists with even fuller details are given in Bell, Horn and Bindoff, which together cover the period up to 1852, when the first Foreign Office List appeared. A summary covering the period 1583-1919 can be found in the Wikipedia article 'List of diplomats from the United Kingdom to the Ottoman Empire' [some minor mistakes]. The following short list shows those for whom there are entries in the ODNB.]

Chaplains, Physicians & Surgeons before 1825

~[for further details about chaplains here and at the Company’s other factories see John Batteridge Pearson, A biographical sketch of chaplains to the Levant Company maintained at Constantinople, Aleppo and Smyrna 1611-1706, Cambridge, 1883.
 This has not been consulted directly in preparing the present list; modern researchers have indicated that some of its findings need to be revised. There was a resident chaplain at Constantinople from 1611; he acted as private chaplain to the ambassador and also ministered to the factory [Wood*EHR*, p. 539]]

[In Oct 1599 the English ambassador [Henry Lello] was reported to have asked the Grand Signor for the use of one of the churches in Galata for a preaching minister whom he had brought with him – this was opposed by the Venetians and the French [CalSPVen, vol. 9].
 This minister might have been “Mr Maye”, who travelled to Constantinople in 1599 with Thomas Dallam [Bent, pp.37-39, 50-51] – cf. Aleppo]

<d. 1720 Salonica; s/o Richard Kemble, merchant and deputy alderman, Bishopsgate [more genealogical details are given by Keen and De Lancey]. Richard junior was apprenticed to a Turkey merchant called Barnardiston [cf. Samuel Barnardiston, Tsr, below]. While indentured to him, Kemble was sent to Smyrna, where he settled and married a Greek lady named Mavrocordato, a native of Scio (Chios), whose sister was married to “Mr Edwards, the British consul”. The Kembles had a son William, b. 1696; another son Peter, b. 12 Dec 1704 Smyrna, later went to America and settled in New Brunswick. Richard returned to London in 1717, after his business in Smyrna had suffered because of war, and the next year he “kissed hands” on being appointed C at Salonica by George I. The account given by De Lancey apparently confused Edwards the “consul” [said to have had a dau. b. ca 1728] with Daniel Edwards, known to have been a merchant at Smyrna in 1649, who returned to London in 1651 and set up a coffee house in St Michael’s Alley, Cornhill, run by his former servant Pasqua Rossi (or Rosee). According to his ODNB entry, he was at Bombay from 1728 to 1740.

~[Although Zante was not under Ottoman Rule, the Levant Company had appointed native

 1628 [Epstein, p. 216; Wood, pp. 66-67; Dickie, p. 60]. The precise status of the early English representatives is not always clear – nor is their location, which might be Zante, Cephalonia or the Morea. After the Restoration the consuls were appointed by the Crown and reported to the Commissioners for Trade and Plantations [Wood, p. 121]. Although trade with Zante was negligible by the 1770s [Wood], consuls continued to be appointed until the establishment of British administration in the Ionian Islands in 1815. It seems that until about 1780 they were
