Transcript of the Entries on the Volumes of Prints, Nos 1 to 325, in the Catalogue of Sir Hans Sloane's Library, British Library, Sloane MS 3972B-C

Antony Griffiths

Slips of the pen are occasionally corrected, abbreviations expanded, punctuation added, but errors of spelling or transcription are not corrected. Sloane's numbering of the volumes is in Roman numerals; these are here changed to Arabic. Square brackets after the first number at the beginning of entries denote later renumberings by Scheuchzer or Stack; in the middle of entries they denote omissions or editorial comments. Round brackets in the descriptions denote later additions, almost always by Stack.

NB Scheuchzer's index to the original number sequence of volumes 1 to 622 (drawn up before he had himself renumbered the volumes) is to be found in MS. Sloane 4019, ff. 220-4.

Appendix B

List of Sloane Volumes that can be Identified in the Department of Prints and Drawings

Antony Griffiths

The following list is a first attempt to give an idea of how much Sloane material survives in more or less its original form in the Department of Prints and Drawings. It is incomplete, and some elements may be inaccurate, but it forms the basis for future additions and corrections. It is arranged in seven columns.

- 1 Current P&D pressmark
- 2 Short description of the work
- 3 Number assigned on arrival in Sloane's collection
- 4 New number assigned *c.*1711
- 5 Scheuchzer renumbering *c.*1726
- 6 Stack renumbering *c.*1734
- 7 Page number of the entry for the volume in Sloane's library catalogue

Numbers in brackets are no longer written in the book, but can be supplied from the catalogue

The Print Collection of William Courten, Sloane MS 3961

Antony Griffiths

William Courten (1642–1702) was the fourth in a family that had been one of the wealthiest in Tudor and Jacobean England, but had lost most of its fortune during the Civil War. Much of William's energies during his life were taken up in lawsuits trying to recover assets. He spent most of his early life on the Continent, especially in Montpellier where he probably first met Sloane. He returned to England in about 1684, and took rooms in Middle Temple. He devoted his time to his very wide-ranging collection, which was much visited and reckoned to be one of the finest in the country. (See the accounts in Edward Edwards, Lives of the Founders of the British Museum, London 1870, pp. 249–73; and A. MacGregor, ed., Sir Hans Sloane, London 1994, passim and especially p. 22.)

In 1702 William Courten bequeathed his entire collection to Hans Sloane (see p. 23). Included in the bequest were his manuscripts, of which several volumes are now bound among the Sloane papers in the British Library. Most of Sloane 3961 contains bound sheets relating to his print collection, and a summary of these sheets, as well as sample extracts from them, is given here. They seem to have been made at a time when Courten was thinking of selling his prints, perhaps in order to raise money to expand other parts of his collection. Certainly other sheets in the volume that list his acquisitions for his collection between 1688 and 1699 include very few prints. Courten spent twenty-five years on the Continent until his return in 1684, and it is likely that he assembled much of his print collection there. There is no reason to think that Courten was a dealer. He did however act as an adviser and agent, and both this manuscript and Sloane 3962 contain many papers relating to his collecting books and medals on behalf of Lord Coleraine.

The importance of these pages for the print historian is considerable. They are the earliest catalogue of a British print collection that not only gives a precise enough description to allow most of the items to be identified, but also gives a valuation. Other sources, such as auction catalogues, are hopelessly inadequate for this period. Although many sheets of the catalogue are missing, those that remain not only allow us to reconstruct much of the collection, but also show what prints then had the highest valuations. Courten had two main principles of classification: first by engraver, and secondly (for his large collection of portrait prints) by sitter. When a print by a selected engraver (such as Hollar) was a portrait, the portrait series usually took priority.

The list of engravers produces a few surprises: already in 1687, only eighteen years after Rembrandt's death, Courten had a separate list of his etchings, with twenty-two prints listed under his name, plus a few more scattered in the portraits. His list of Dürer contains a first-class collection of engravings, but does not include a single woodcut. Woodcuts, like mezzotints, were listed together on a separate sheet, as a collection by technique, not engraver. Only a dozen or so woodcuts were listed in all, and only three Dürers were among them. Prints by Dürer and Lucas van Leyden were valuable, but Dürer more so. The top price for a

Lucas (the Crucifixion) is 10s, whereas several Dürers make this price. One, the Adam and Eve, is exceptionally valued at £2. But the valuations for prints by Marcantonio and his associates (Agostino Veneziano, Marco da Ravenna, as well as Bonasone) are regularly between £1 and £4, showing that the classic works of the Italian High Renaissance had an unassailable prestige.

Much other incidental information of interest will be found in the lists. Courten collected copies as well as originals, and the valuations given to the copies is sometimes significant. He also notes counterproofs (he uses the term 'counterpreuves'), which also bear significant valuations. Clearly both types of print played an accepted and recognised role in print collections of the period. The lists also allow us to find the names of some of the people that he worked with, such as Gibson, Bateman, Talman, Baker, Floyd, Tempest, Thomson and Huckle. Only a few of these are known to existing scholarship, and the rest await further research. Courten's most interesting associate was Adrian Beverland, who valued and swapped his Marcantonios against some valuable gold medals, and purchased a number of other prints at various times (see p. 26).

The Courten papers are all in his own handwriting. Parts are written in his code, which consists of a simple substitution of symbols for letters. A partial key to it is given in Sl. 4019 f. 79 and in the transcripts that follow the code is silently transliterated. Prices are in pre-decimal British currency: twelve pence = one shilling, twenty shillings = one pound. (Courten also had a price code, which I cannot understand; since he gives valuations not in code in the right column, I can only imagine that this code refers to the price that he paid.) The sheets in the volume have been bound in a very illogical order, and the following synopsis of the pages relating to his print collection is arranged by the contents, not the pagination. The pages fall into three main groups: (A) those listing the best prints in his collection that he wanted to keep, or was intending to sell, (B) those on his collection of portrait prints, and (C) those listing his purchases of all kinds of material (mostly natural history) for his collection from 1688 to his death.

Transcript of the Catalogue of the Drawings and Prints in the Cracherode Collection

Antony Griffiths

This is taken from a small vellum-bound book with blank leaves. These bear a watermark of Britannia in an oval with the manufacturer's name J. Grove and the date 1802. Books of this kind were often supplied for use in the British Museum at the beginning of the nineteenth century (this information comes from Christopher Date). On the front cover are the initials WB and the date 1804. The initials probably stand for the Rev. William Beloe, although the handwriting is not his. Given the number of basic mistakes, it was probably compiled by a clerk working from notes supplied to him. Written on the flyleaf in pencil in the hand of William Alexander is 'General Catalogue of Prints in the Museum Collection'.
